CAGE MASTS' VALUE PROVED.

Far from pronouncing the deom of the cage mast of the American battleships, the recent firing tests in Chesapeake Bay are regarded by navai officers as demonstrating most concine-ingly the efficiency of the cage mast. mast erected on the hulk of the San Merces, formerly the battleship Texas, which lies on the sheals of Tangier Sound, Chesapeake Bay. Of these thirteen were fair and square hits, and the last hit toppied the mast into the water, while this heavy fire, concentrated upon the mast at close range, resuited after thirteen hits in the destruction of the mast. Navai officers assert that in the first place the masts of a ship in action would never under any imaginable circumstances, be subjected to such a fire. In the second place, it is declared, two or three weil-directed shots at one of the oid-time cylindrical masts would be sufficient to bring it down. Therefore the recent tests prove conclusively that the cage mast can withstand at least six or seven times the firing that the old mast can endure.

The cage mast originated with the American navy, though other navies are beginning to adopt it.

Regulation of Streams by Forests Is Solved.

Been Worked Out by United States Geological Survey-Means Purchase of Land Under Weeks Act.

Washington.-That the forest cover of mountains and hills has an appreclable and measurable effect on navigation streams and that the remeval of the forest growth from the iands tends to produce fleeds is the conclusion roached by the United States Geological Survey announced as the result of a series of scientific experiments in the White mountains of New England. The report carries with it the statement of the survey that the removal of the ferests tends enough to have made the mouths of to produce floods. The investigations the gods water, to have made Jove are believed to soive a prebiem long pawn his thunder and Neptune his tri- a source of strenuous contention ing far beyond the were parade; it was dent for a second helping.-Baitimore | among scientists. While the investigations have direct reference to the White mountain area only, they estabiish a principle of far wider application and indicate that there may be a scientific method of preventing floods generally.

In conducting its experiments, the Geological Survey selected two small, aimost exactly similar drainage basins of about five square miles each en the east branch of Pemigewassett river, one largely clothed with virgin timber and the other deferested and burned.

Careful measurements of precipitatien ever the areas and of the run-off of the respective streams show that not only was the snow held better in the forested area, but that during a period of 17 days in April, including three extended sterms, the run-off of the stream in the deferested area was a comparative flood, practically double that of the stream flewing through the forested area.

On both streams hydrographic stations were established and the stream flow determined with a high degree of accuracy. The survey report shows that the maximum fleed flew from the forested basin was only 67 per cent. of that from the deferested basin The Survey says:.

"The stream of the forested basin is observed to be the steadier of the two and in proportion to its drainage area it tends-at least during the spring months—to promote a steady flew of water in the master stream of which it is a tributary.

"Such an actual demonstration and quantitative measure of the performance of different areas, some forested and others deforested, has never been attempted in trying to determine the effect of forest cover on stream flew. Efforts to arrive at definite conclusions have always been based on a study of long-time records of precipitation and stream discharge; but owing to the many qualifying factors such efforts have simply resulted in divergent opinions and inconciusivo controveries.

"The results of the present actual measurements in these mimic drainage basins, so accurate and refined in method as to approach laboratory experiments, where exact results may be expected, leave no doubt as to the conclusion. Forest cover and the resuiting forest mat in the White mountain granite area does to a considerable and measurable degree steady and regulate stream flow, and therefore must be stated as an important factor in maintaining the navigability of streams whose headwaters lie in such areas."

MORE TEACHERS NEEDED. '

The national welfare depends on agricultural prosperity; agriculture it. self is daily becoming more and more of a science; and these two factors Sixteen 12-inch explosive shells reinforce the pressing demand for FRED A PARKER, D. O. were fired at the experimental cage more and better agricultural education among the rurai pepuiation. But where are the teachers of agriculture coming from? This question is raised by A. C. Menchan, specialist in rurai education of the United States bureau of education.

"At present nearly two thousand high schools are teaching agriculture the course being taken by an aggregate of some 37,000 pupils," says Mr. Monahan. "But in ail these schoels, enly a very few besides those giving four-year courses in this subject have instructors with a college or normal school training in scientific agricuiture, while a large percentage of the active teachers with this training have had no training in psychology or pedagogy

"Probably ne one factor has had greater influence in retarding the introduction of substantlai courses in agriculture in all those higher schools whose pupils are drawn in large numbers from farming districts than the shortage of properly qualified teach

The order man stepped quietly in He recognized the "lady of the Dressed geese, 11c per pound for house" quality in Mrs. Fairfax's accents. > "No," snorted Anne Fairfax, "I'm going to clean this kitchen! Just look at it!" she wailed, forgetting her dignity. "That filthy creature has only been here one week, and look at it! And I thought she was keeping things clean!"

> As soon as the kitchen was darkened and less full of the buzzing winged torments, Anne Fairfax tacked up her blue dimity skirt under a voluminous gingham apron, rolled her dainty sleeves above her rather frail-looking elbows and doughtily attacked the sink and its greasy contents. After an hour's toil she decided to go down cellar and look at the refrigerator. "Ugh!" It is as I feared, and the cellar is so stuffy and musty."

> Anne Fairfax elimbed up on a chair to open a window, but rust and neglect had done their work, and bang and poke as she might the window refused to open till a more than usually vicious push brought success. It also brought a leg off the rickety chair, and Anne Fairfax was deposited with more force than dignity in the coal bin.

> After a few moments of wondering that no bones were broken, our literary lady dragged herself up the cellar stairs and seated herself, for one moment's rest.

"The cellar window's open, any way. Now for the refrigerator.' But not vet. Anne Fairfax had been unfortunate in her selection of a chair, already adorned by sticky lly paper. "Dear me!" she said after reveral minutes spent in futile effort to rid her dress of the adhesive tistill I've finished and can take my he hadn't shaved.

Anne Fairfax gathered her trembling faculties together and descended to renew the attack on the refrigernoon. I don't like bein' insinon- crator. She had just about finished this when the front door bell rang.

"I'll just gather up these odds and ends and carry them with me. Why can a servant never seein to learn to make her head save her heels? Intelligence, I suppose. I'll take the bucket, too. Oh, have PA-TIENCE!" (this to the bell). Halfway up Anne Fairfax stepped on the back of her rather narrow skirt-and all her hands being occupied- But why tell what happened? Suffice it to say that when Mr. Fairfax (who had forgotten his dead-latch key) finally seenred an entrance by means of the one open cellar window, he found a blackened, disheveled, half-drenched "literary light" lying in a heap on the cellar floor surrounded by broken crockery mixed with odds and cudof cold beans and stewed tomatocs in a pool of cold, greasy water strongly tinetured with ammonia

After a tearful, garbled account of the morning's happenings had been sobbed into his sympathetic ears, "Never mind, dear," soothed Mr. Fairfax, 'it's a good thing you are not hurt. We'll close up the old house and board for a while. Servants are the diekens!"

"Well - well - how about the Rockyfellers? They're com-comcoming to din-din-dinner."

"Bless the Rockyfellers!" gasped Mr. Fairfax. "Oh, well-see herc, we'll take them to town-to a roof garden for dinner, so trot off and get er-washed up and dressed. Why -what's the matter now?" for Mrs. Fairfax had fairly dissolved in tears.

"I-I-won't g-g-get my ar-ar-article off tonight-and it-it-it's SO IMPORTANT."

"What article, dearest?" asked Mr.

"That's just l-l-like a m-m-man," sobbed Anne Fairfax. "What article, indeed? My-my ar-article on Why My Ser-ser-vants St-st-stay With Me'-to be sure."-Buffalo Express.
